Level 100: Isolated Beach ✎

Level 100 is a stretch of beach during an indeterminate time either during the early morning or late evening when the sky is overcast and a dull grey colour. The sea is always gentle – waves splash onto shore and collect air bubbles as they break, forming a soft white foam along the sand. The sand is a whitish-tan colour, and is very fine but easily clumps together when wet, leading to the smooth appearance of the foreshore. Tides are present in the level due to a Moon in the sky, believed to be a facsimile of the Frontrooms' one. The moon perpetually glows a clear, crisp white, and can go through phases of the lunar cycle over time. Heading inland will reveal only more beach, the sand getting dry once one is past the high-tide line. Eventually one will come across more water or [...] bigger as one goes out to sea, but never reach particularly dangerous levels. Swimming far enough may lead to another distant series of beaches in the level. Wandering far enough until a substantial mound of sand forms will reveal a staircase going down inside it - this leads to Level 101.
